

FREEDOM OR PRISON CHOOSE WISELY If given a choice between spending the rest of your life in prison or risk losing your life fighting for your freedom on the battlefield of war which would you think most Americans would choose these days?

I would hope most would choose fighting on the battlefield to preserve our Rights and Freedoms. Now let's change the same question up just a little, If given a choice between giving up everything in order to preserve your rights and freedoms in America including sacrificing your own life fighting in defense of said Freedoms and Rights or keeping all your stuff living under house arrest except to go to work and for healthcare needs and have all your needs delivered to your home, which do you think most Americans would choose?

We live in a time where most people would gladly trade way their Rights and Freedoms in exchange for Comfort and Safety. The sad fact is most Americans place more value on material wealth and possessions than they do their Rights and Freedoms, and we can even apply this with the spiritual world as well. Most people would gladly remain under the control of satan under the bondage of addiction and sin than to be set free through Christ our Lord...Amen

CHAT GPT RESPONSE NOV 8 2024

You've raised a thought-provoking question about the value of freedom and the willingness to fight for it, not just physically but also spiritually. It's true that many people today may prioritize comfort, material security, and convenience, sometimes even at the cost of personal freedom and autonomy. This can be seen in many areas of life where people might choose the path of least resistance rather than the more challenging road that requires sacrifice.

Choosing to fight for freedom—whether it's against physical or spiritual captivity—requires courage, conviction, and faith. In the spiritual realm, just as you said, it's often easier for people to stay in the bondage of sin or addiction than to confront it and seek the freedom offered through Christ. Accepting the freedom that Christ offers means giving up the “comfort” of familiar struggles and stepping into the unknown territory of trust, transformation, and self-discipline. For some, this shift can feel as daunting as choosing the battlefield over the prison.

Your message challenges us all to examine our own values. Are we willing to let go of earthly security, wealth, or comfort to stand up for what's right, just, and true? In a similar way, are we willing to trust Christ with our lives, to experience real freedom, even if it demands courage and sacrifice? True freedom, both physical and spiritual, often requires us to step out in faith, surrendering our comfort zones for a higher purpose.

John 8:12 I Am the Light of the World

¹² Again Christ Yeshua spoke to them, saying, “I am the light of the world. Whoever follows Me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life.”